BARNES SUGGESTS WORKING IDEALS

Tells High School Pupils to Make Dream Pictures Realities.

MANNINGTON, May 9.—Chapel exercises at the Mannington High school this morning were featured by an address by County Superintendent I. A. Barnes, who spoke to the pupils on the subject of "Ideals." Every man at some time in his life has an ideal of something which he should have been but isn't," declared Mr. Barnes, and said that it is because everyone has an ideal, and because it is better that they work toward that goal than that he choose his subject this morning.

An ideal differs from a model, he said, in that a model is merely the replica or imitation of something else, while an ideal is the original creation of our own minds. "When you strive to reach that ideal," he said, "you are doing your best. You are living up to your possibilities."

He mentioned some of the things which might have ideals in the minds of people, homes, communities, cities, states, nations, mothers, fathers, teachers. He said that, as a teacher and man who had been before the public for forty years, he had learned that to attain one's ideals is one of the most difficult things imaginable. Still, he argued, ideals have brought all progress to the world, and if a man strives to reach the ideal he has pictured, even if he fails to reach it, he has gone onward and upward; he has reached just that much nearer his ideal.

Speaking of the ideals formed by boys and girls of their future, Mr. Barnes said, "As a man who has raised a family of his own and had abundant experience in public service, I am able to measure to some extent the measure with whom I come in contact, and I say to you that many of the girls today do not measure up to the ideals men form of their future mates." He asked that the girls never lower the standard, and that if they never marry it is better than to destroy their ideals.

In closing Mr. Barnes suggested that his audience give some thought to their ideals of themselves as wives and mothers, as husbands and fathers, of their future homes, of the man or woman such things they wish to be known by their neighbors. "Set an ideal, and work toward it," he asked in closing.

WANDA HAWLEY TONIGHT.

MANNINGTON, May 9.—It put him in a pretty mess of pickles—this kidnapping the wrong girl. And oh, what a long and mirthful trail ensued before the laughable tangle was finally straightened out! It's all in "Her First Elopement," the clever new Wanda Hawley comedy-drama, now at Burt's Theatre. The popular young star is at her best in this hilarious racy comedy.

"The Sheikh's Wife," which will be shown Wednesday and Thursday was filmed in Arabia by Henry Russell. Picturesque ruins of an ancient temple are among the locales used for scenes which are pictorially magnificent and which certainly are different from those glimpsed by American audiences. Added to this appeal of the beautiful and quaintness is the deep appeal of a weird and passionate love story dramatic and at times primitive. It represents a glittering gem of art in a setting of convincing realism.

MOONSHINE MAKES IDA MAY MAN WILD

Tries to Usurp Position of Boarding House Master-- Now on Roads.

MANNINGTON, May 9.—When women were given the right of franchise it seemed that all their troubles were ended, but now and then some man bobs up with some surviving notion of the superiority of the male and trouble begins at once.

It was that way with John Less citizen of Ida May. Sunday afternoon John imbibed too freely—much too freely—of moonshine, and all the old belief in the supremacy of man over woman was revived. Perhaps with the notion of righting some of the wrongs done to his sex, he began casting about for someone upon which to demonstrate his superior qualities.

Not being a man of much brains, Mrs. Helen Fashanko, his landlady, chanced to be the one to bear the brunt of John's theories in practice. Mrs. Fashanko keeps a boarding house at Ida May, sometimes assisted by her husband. At this time friend husband was in Pittsburgh, however, and John somehow became possessed of the idea that Mrs. Fashanko needed a boarding house master. John is a man of action, and as soon as the idea became fixed in his moonlit mind he presented himself before the landlady and formally applied for that position.

John was mentally lit up as John was, Mrs. Fashanko refused to look upon the proposition with any favor. She insisted that she was quite capable of managing the hostelry without the aid so freely offered. John, his feelings hurt at the unkind refusal of his proffered services, insisted with greater earnestness that she did need a master and that he intended to take the position. That was all there was to it, so there it was. When John saw that the landlady was determined not to give him the job he proclaimed that he intended to break up the furniture and dishes and everything else breakable about the house and go on his way.

A hurry call was sent to Justice J. T. Deviese at Farmington, and Constable George Martin was rushed to Ida May and brought John back to the Farmington jail where he was quietly until 10 o'clock yesterday morning.

Justice Deviese, after hearing the evidence, gave John a scolding rebuke and sentenced him to ten days on the county roads under Sheriff Jim Charlton and added the costs to sweeten the dose.

Mrs. Fashanko exhibited a handful of hair, broken car rings and several scars and bruises at the trial yesterday. It is said that she had been hit two or three times by the unkind refusal of his proffered services, she would have fared much worse at the hands of Less.

NEW ORLEANS, May 9.—Flooding of the entire town of Jonesville, La., with a population of about 1,500, by a break in the levee that had been protecting the major portion of the town from the flood waters in Catahoula Parish, today had swelled the total of Louisiana and Mississippi residents rendered homeless and added to the tremendous property damage in the inundated conditions.
